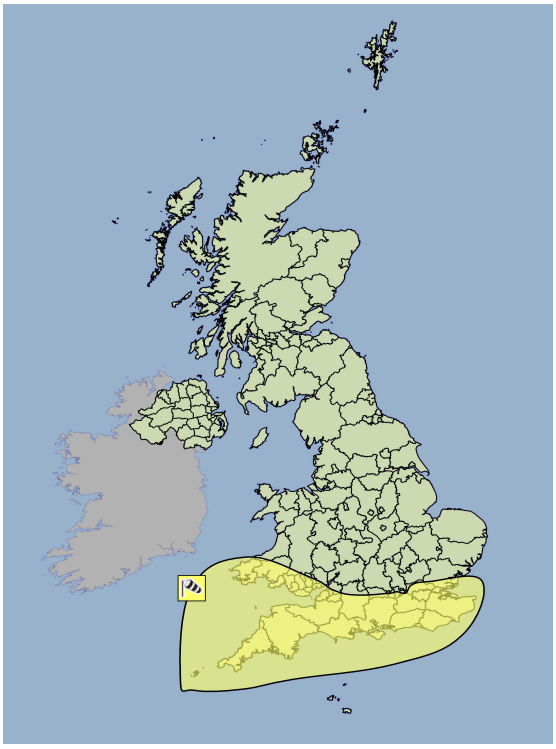
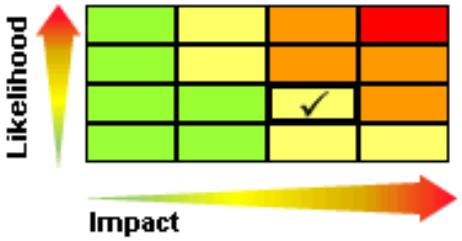
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure is expected to move eastwards across the UK on Monday with a swathe of very strong winds around its southern flank, which will cross much of southern England and parts of south Wales. The winds are likely to be very gusty at times, particularly in association with heavy showers running across these areas.

There remains some uncertainty in northward extent of the damaging winds as well as the peak strengths and so this warning will be kept under review.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 03:00 on Mon, 08th Feb 2016 until 18:00 on Mon, 08th Feb 2016

An area of very strong winds are expected to extend east across much of southern England and parts of south Wales on Monday morning. Gusts of 60-70 mph are likely quite widely, with 80 mph gusts likely in exposed coastal areas, particularly Cornwall. Some very large waves are also likely to affect many coasts, in particular the north coasts of Cornwall and Devon. Winds should gradually ease through the afternoon and evening.

Please be aware of the potential for disruption to travel as well as possible damage to trees and structures and interruption of power supplies.

This is a further update to extend the warning to cover most other counties of southern England.
